JOHN CAMPBELL, Chairman.
J. W. D. BROWN, Secretary.

The New York Sun congratulates General Butler on the fact that he is not running for any office this year. The Providence Journal congratulates the Sun on the same fact. It is strange that the country should have been overlooked in these congratulations.

If we are going to have free wool, the duty on woolen manufactured goods should be made still lower. Robert Bleakee, a woolen manufacturer of Maine, says that the proposed duty of forty per cent would be ample protection if the Englishmen paid nothing whatever for the cost of labor for manufacturing woolen goods. If Colorado is not to have any protection for its wool, we at least want to have the corresponding advantage of getting cheaper clothes.

United States District Attorney Henry W. Hobson and the Hon. Thomas Macon have gone into partnership for the practice of law in Denver. The son of Mr. Macon will also be a member of the firm. Mr. Macon was for many years a member of the law firm of Wells, Smith & Macon when it was the leading law firm in Colorado. Since leaving that firm he has resided in Cañon City. He will now move back to Denver. Mr. Macon has long held and now has the reputation of being one of the three or four best lawyers in the state for practice before a jury. Mr. Hobson is much younger, but already has achieved an enviable reputation in court practice. His success in trying government cases in this state led to his appointment as special attorney to overhaul the trial of important cases in Utah and Oregon. In these cases he was opposed by men like ex-Senator McDonald and ex-Senator Henderson. But in every instance he has managed the government case so well that he has been successful. No lawyer of his age in the west has a better record.

There is one thing that the committee now investigating our immigration system should inquire into. It is said that one coal company in Pennsylvania has imported under contract eight thousand Hungarians, two thousand Italians and fifteen hundred Poles. By doing this they have reduced the wages for the men in their work twenty-five per cent. They are enabled to give these lower wages because they crowd thirty or forty families of these foreigners in a single house and charge each family but a dollar a month rent. If our people want to protect the laborers, let us be honest about it. Manufacturers are the people who really show the most anxiety in retaining our present tariff laws. If they really wish them to protect the laboring men they ought to do something to use the figure of General Harrison, etc, to make the gates of Castle Garden open outwards. We cannot protect American labor if we allow American manufacturers to advertise and contract with the pauper labor of Europe who can live as comfortably as they wish at the rate of a dollar a month rent for each family. It is bad enough for the mechanics of this country to compete with the pauper labor of Europe that is in Europe without bringing that same pauper labor here.

There is some discussion as to what the house will do if the senate shall pass a substitute for the Mills bill which shall materially reduce the revenue. Speaker Carlisle is in favor of passing it, while Mills favors insisting on his bill substantially as it was passed. The democratic party would be wise to do this provided the senate bill does not increase the tariff in any one direction. The fact is, the whole country needs and demands the reduction of the surplus. While the republican minority in the house did perfectly right in opposing many of the provisions of the Mills bill, it was unpatriotic in not working sympathetically toward the passage of a good bill. It simply pursued a policy of obstruction. Bad advisers wished the senate to do the same but the republican senate has wisely refused to look at this question from a party standpoint, but from the standpoint of officers of the government who are intrusted with the power and the duty to legislate for the best interests of the whole country. The best interests of the whole country demand the revision and reduction of the tariff. They are taking the patriotic course, which in the end will be the wisest course for the party. The same question will now go back to the house. If the democratic majority find it impossible to secure the passage of the Mills bill, they will wisely accept any bill which gives tariff reduction. The party in congress that thinks least of making a party point and most of doing what is for the best interests of the country will be in the best shape at the election this fall.

Iaboucheri, in his telegram to the Chicago Tribune, gives the following opinion of the Parnell libel suit against the Times:

"The reason why Parnell brings his action for libel is most simple. He had treated the Times' forgeries with contempt, merely telling the house of commons that if it deemed that its honor was affected by this charge against one of its members he was prepared to prove his innocence before a committee composed of his colleagues. This offer the government declined. An act was then passed for a general fishing inquiry. The entire liberal party protested against the selection of judges by Lord Salisbury, against the mode of procedure to be adopted, and against the scope of inquiry. They particularly protested against the refusal to instruct the commissioners to inquire immediately into the genuineness of the letters and against the clause which deprived Parnell of any right to claim damages from the Times for the publication of the forged letters, should it be proved that they were forged. Parnell, therefore determined that if there were to be an inquiry there should be a real one and that the Times should not be protected from the pecuniary consequences of its libel. The verdict of a Scotch jury is a majority one. There is no fear of a trial ending in a disagreement and no verdict. If the Times can prove that the letters were written by Parnell, his character will be blasted. If it cannot prove this Walter will have to pay a substantial sum as well as the entire costs of action."

A Story of Tom Corwin.

Recommendations do not count much in obtaining office in these days. The president and his cabinet know how easy it is to get signatures to any kind of a petition. One can get a thousand signatures in any county for the release of a murderer, and public men give letters freely to get rid of office seekers. Almost any man who has not been in the penitentiary can get an indorsement from his congressman or senator, and the majority of public men are like Tom Corwin. Corwin was too good natured to refuse anything of any man who asked it, and he indorsed the applications of all who came to him. At last he was appointed secretary of the treasury, and these indorsements began to come in. One day a man whom he did remember called upon him in the treasury department and asked for a position. Corwin asked the man if he had any indorsements. He said he had, had the best in the world, and Corwin reached out his hand for them. He opened the first paper he touched, and it was a letter to William M. Meredith, who had been secretary of the treasury before Corwin, and it strongly indorsed the bearer for a position. It was signed by Corwin's unmistakable autograph, and as he read it his dark face twitched. At last he looked up and said: "Did not this letter get you a position?" said he.

"No," replied the man, "it did not."

"Well," replied Corwin, "if this indorsement was not good enough to get you a position under A. Meredith it certainly will not get you one under me. Good day." — Washington Letter.

THE FALLACY OF JUGGERNAUT.

Moncure D. Conway Argues that the Time-Honored Indian Idol is not Horrible.

[Written for the Gazette.]

There is no horror more widespread than that of the car of Juggernaut. No church or chapel or Sunday school room is unfamiliar with the vision of people throwing themselves beneath its blood stained wheels. There are few American girls—boys even—who have not shed tears and dimes for the victims of that cruel idol. The dreadful self immolation has added a proverbial significance to pulpit and platform eloquence. Grim Juggernaut has got into the cyclopedias. But the chariot of truth is passing through the world many cherished fallacies must be cast beneath its ponderous wheels. Juggernaut has long held this world-wide notion about Juggernaut. It is a delusion. Hard as it is to lose one's pet horror, this one must be given up. The supposed custom of immolation under the wheels of Juggernaut does not prevail, never did prevail, in the country. Juggernaut is the most humane of all oriental deities, and has cult the most civilized.

I could fill a column with official and unquestionable proofs of this paradox, but reserve the space for some facts of more interest to the reader. It will be sufficient to substantiate the point by a few competent authorities whose testimony has not been disputed. Dr. W. W. Hunter, gazetteer general of India, says in his Orissa (1872):

"In a closely packed, eager throng of a hundred thousand men and women, many of them unaccustomed to exposure and hard labor, and all of them toiling and straining to the utmost under the blazing tropical sun, deaths must occasionally occur. There have doubtless been instances of pilgrims throwing themselves under the wheels in a frenzy of religious excitement. But such instances have been rare, and are now unknown. At one time several unhappy people were killed or injured every year; but they are almost invariably cases of accidental trampling. The few suicides that did occur were, for the most part, cases of diseased and miserable objects. The official returns now place this beyond doubt. Indeed, nothing could be more opposed to the spirit of Vishnu worship than self immolation. Accidental death within the temple renders the whole place unclean. The ritual suddenly stops and the polluted offerings are hurried away from the sight of the offended god. According to Chaitanya, the apostle of Jaganath, the destruction of the least of God's creatures was a sin against the Creator. Self-immolation he would have regarded with horror. The copious religious literature of his sect frequently describes the Car Festival, but makes no mention of self-sacrifice; nor does it contain any passage that could be twisted into a sanction for it. Abul Fazl, the Mussulman observer, is equally silent, although from the context it is almost certain that, had he heard of the practice, he would have mentioned it. So far from encouraging self-immolation, the gentle doctrines of Jaganath tended to check the once universal custom of widow burning. Even before the government put a stop to it our officials observed its comparative infrequency at Puri.

Being in India eleven years after the above was published, I conversed with Dr. Hunter on this subject and found that the evidences even for suicide, under the car at Puri, had diminished since his work was written. The English commissioner of Orissa had in four years known but one death, and, indeed, and two in which the victims had rid themselves of excruciating complaints. This was just after the province passed under English rule, which did not interfere with the festival. Prof. Bain, of Aberdeen University, says (1879):

An Indian civil servant, Mr. James Geddes, who had been resident magistrate at Orissa, where the festival is held, informed me, from his own knowledge, that no trace of the practice of immolation could be found in the public records of the district.

According to Wilson, the Orientalist, pilgrimages to Juggernaut have been customary for only some 150 years, so that the annals are traceable. Dr. Hunter has gone carefully through them, has conversed with the oldest inhabitants, and found no explanation of the bad reputation of the cult. It is surmised that some early missionary who witnessed the car festival did not understand that the reason why human beings drew it, instead of animals, is lest one of these should get killed, and so pollute the sacred precinct. The man can say if he is ill or exhausted, but not the beast, who might be driven to his death. Shocked by an apparent degradation of humanity, meant to preserve animal life such surmised missionary, if an accident occurred, might suppose it part of the programme. His physical and moral nerves, unsettled, might inflate the story, and when this gained currency in missionary meetings and swelled collections, its inflation would hardly diminish. There is an evolution in stories, a survival of the fittest for raising contributions might so develop a Juggernaut accident or suicide that the original witness would not recognize his narrative as told in the tabernacles.

Suicide is different from self-immolation. There are more religious suicides in England than in India. On the day after the Prince of Wales attended a thanksgiving at St. Paul's for his recovery I read a paragraph stating that several persons were at one point crushed to death. The item might float like a thistle seed to some far land and spring up to a belief that in England human victims are offered on the recovery of a prince from illness.

The west understands the east as little as the east does the west. When India passed under direct English rule a difficult problem was presented by the enormous possessions of its various sects. The new government was compelled to appoint temple trustees and idol guardians. England slowly realized that its queen was all the heads of many headed idolatry. Her viceroy disbursed revenues of Paganism. Under a formal pledge of protection to the great temple of Juggernaut an annual sum was assigned the Brahmans from the revenue of the annexed province. In 1845 a tremendous tolmic arose in England about that particular patronage the government being charged with subsidizing this most murderous idolatry. The excitement became in India every that the English were about to destroy their religion, and contributed not a little to the mutiny of 1857. More persons were immolated in that struggle than had ever been sacrificed to all the gods of India together. And all the time Juggernaut, the deity whose fictitious victims largely occasioned the slaughters, was awaiting in wooden harmlessness the era of Oriental research which now proves this a form of Vishnu, the kind and protector of life, to whom sacrifice, even animal, is an abomination. So it appears that Christian superstitions can be cured at a Jaganath (the right spelling) means "Lord of the World." It is an epithet of Krishna who is a form of Vishnu the Hindu savior. His great shrine is at Puri Orissa. At one of his two annual festivals the image is borne at the other he is drawn in his car. According to his legend Krishna was killed by a hunting man. His bones were found under a tree and a king, Indradyumna, was directed by Vishnu to form an image of Jaganath and place Krishna's bones inside it. Vishvakarma, divine architect, undertook to make the image but being hurried by the king he left it in anger. So Jaganath was left without hands or feet. In compensation for this Brahma gave the image life and soul and the pride of its consecration.

It is discernible through this legend that there was a dynasty on account of the sacred bones within it that the image was consecrated. And although to the Christian spectator the worship may appear merely that of a painted stock, this is not true. It symbolizes a resurrection of Krishna's dead body. The only sacrifices before it are flowers, each a hope of immortality. The associations with Juggernaut are unique, and the spirit investing the shrine so far in advance of anything else known, in India that the cult has become of social and political importance. Forbes, in his "Plea for Indian Missions" (1865), says: "Caste is the devil's yoke, and 'Juggernath was invented by devils.' This is not felicitous, for at the shrine of Juggernaut caste disappears. It is the one temple in India where the prince and the pauper, the Brahman and the Pariah kneel together. Through this peculiar characteristic of opulence has been developed a means by which a certain fraternization with the English has been secured. It has long been caste law that none of the Brahmans family can touch any soil but that of India without defilement. Young Hindoos were for a long time restrained from visiting England, to prepare themselves for the civil service, because of the really defiling and costly ceremonies of purification entailed on their return. But in recent years it has been ascertained that it is only necessary for the returning traveller to go straight to the shrine of Juggernaut. Having obtained a certificate of pilgrimage to Juggernaut no further questions are asked; his caste is safe. In this way Juggernaut, while still signifying savagery for Christian pulpits, has become a point of union, not to say mitigator, of English civilization in India.

Juggernaut has also become the shrine of religious toleration in India. At all the great religious festivals his image may be seen with peaceful Buddha seated beside it. Buddhism was exterminated from India many centuries ago. There is no Buddhist temple nearer than Ceylon; but the great and gentle teacher, whom we are all beginning to love as the "Light of Asia," has, within a few generations, been taken by the hand, so to say, by Juggernaut. Buddha is gradually coming back to the heart of India through the liberalism of the worshipers of Juggernaut. This is the most important sign of moral progress and intellectual movement among the 200,000,000 of India. Juggernaut and Buddha are now venerated together in every part of the country. They are the gentle, or one may say the gentlemanly, gods of the land. No violence, no cruelty nor bloodshed can approach them. The pious devotee will not slay an insect near their temples. Such is the record of the actual as contrasted with the imaginary Juggernaut, whose only human sacrifices have been drawn from the pious pockets of Christendom. In Juggernaut are summed the lives of avatars representing those whom Hindoos call their saviors, as distinguished from Siva, the destroyer's incarnations. In him are Vishnu and Krishna and Buddha. I have before me the regulation for the only sacrifice permitted at the altars of Vishnu-Krishna-Juggernaut, these three being one. "He who adores the Supreme Being should behold him in every creature and every creature in him. The Lord of life should not be worshipped with flowers that have faded. Those of thine own garden are far better than those of any other. With the flowers gathered must be reverence—itself a flower. There is in the intellect a sacred lotus to which every breath is wafted and in it lost. He who shall contemplate this flower shall find it full of splendor beyond the collective light of many moons and near unto the deity."
